

Training on Managing Project Preparation for Climate Change Adaptation

16 - 20 January 2017
Bangkok, Thailand

The training on managing project preparation for climate change adaptation is a comprehensive five (5) day training program to enable government officials to prepare fundable project proposals for climate change adaptation.

The training is organised by Climate Change Asia (CCA), Asian Institute of Technology (AIT).

Objectives

- Help in understanding climate change realities and risks; how to manage risks, screen for sensitivities, and address key vulnerable groups and areas; how climate change adaptation can be grounded in national development plans and broader national adaptation policy and strategic frameworks.
- Aid in identifying sources of international funding options and develop capacities for accessing those sources.
- Build capacity in project preparation for climate change adaptation by illustrating 'how-to' methods, tools and processes for use in rigorous adaptation project/program design in line with policies and plans.
- Provide an introduction to Implementation and monitoring of projects.

About Climate Change Asia

The Climate Change Asia (CCA) at the Asian Institute of Technology (AIT) aims to

- Meet the capacity building needs in the Asia Pacific region, in line with the Paris Agreement and 2030 Development Agenda.
- The overall goal of the CCA Program is to assist countries to meet, and even surpass, the targets outlined in their INDCs by enhancing national capacities.
- The Program has two broad outputs-i) build capacities of government officials, private sector managers, NGOs and other key actors in the region in identifying and managing climate change responses; ii) translate these enhanced capacities into on-the-ground action.

Target participants

The training is open to government officials who manage project proposal and development from Asia and the Pacific.

Course fee

A course fee of USD 2,500 per participant includes the course material as well as refreshments. Participants are expected to make their own flight and accommodation arrangements.

Venue

Bangkok, Thailand

Contact Information

For more information,
registration, and course fee
payment, contact cca@ait.asia

